Excerpt: ... PART IV. IHu/irations of imported Infection into the Weft India Islands, and the Colony of Demerary, in South America, during the Years 1793, 1794, 1795, and 1/96. CONVINCED that the truth of my general pofition can be established alone by the concurring testimony of many; and that the public have a right to withhold their belief till such manifestations of the existence of a fact are produced, as must secure conviction--fatisfied also, that assertions, however unfounded, tending to subvert the impression made by a faithful narrative of events, may have the effect they are calculated to produce, unless it can be proved, that the fame, or events of a similar nature, arising from the fame cause, have been observed and recorded by others, as well as the original narrator; I have paid uncommon attention to the subject of imported infection, from my arrival in the West West Indies in 17Q6, till such time as I acquired, what I conceived, sufficient additional evidence of the truth of what I advanced, on good, but limited, grounds, in 1/9-4. The result of my enquiries and labours I now submit to the consideration os my readers, without any addition or comment on the information I have received, but such as are necessary to elucidate the subject. In statements of this nature, an important point has been very generally neglected: without a delineation of the circumstances relating to the topography, endemic morbid causes, climate, &c. of a country, how is a stranger to discriminate between the morbid constitution of any particular year, and that which generally prevails, and arises from causes merely local? The conclusions he may draw, without this assistance, will often be erroneous, and can never be perfectly correct. It is to assist the readers discriminatin...
