

Crosscut Saw Reflections in the Pacific Northwest

With his fathers help in 1946, Jim started using two-man crosscut saws. As part of his job as an engineer for the U.S. Forest Service in the early 1980s, he was incharge of trails in wilderness areas where crosscut saws have been required tools since the Wilderness Act of 1964. With some urgings, mostly from within, he began an indept research about crosscut saws from their early beginngs to when they entered the Pacific Northwest in 1811. As the development of tooth patterns changed along with changes to the economic development to the region at the beginning of the 20th century, crosscut saw patentees moved to this region along with eastern crosscut saw manufacturers. In the first half of the 20th century, timber was the major employer in this region and people from cut-over timber stands in the east along with displaced workers caused by the Dust Bowl era moved to this region to find work. At the middle of the 20th century, chainsaws dominated the timber industry and other than crosscut saw competition at timber carnival, crosscut saws were used mainly in wilderness areas of national forests to remove windfalls across trails.
