

Latin Composition (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Latin Composition This book of exercises in Latin Composition is designed to accompany the Caesar selections in Second Year Latin. A sufficient amount of material has been prepared for drill in composition during the Caesar year. Following the method most in vogue, the exercises are based on the text for vocabulary, idioms, and general principles of sentence structure. In the presentation of the syntax, however, an important departure has been made, which will, I trust, commend itself to thoughtful teachers. Instead of following the chance or caprice of the text, the syntax has been presented in a systematic and orderly manner. The constructions in the special parts of the text upon which the respective exercises are based, are used only so far as they fit into this plan. The knowledge of syntax which comes to pupils from reading an author, or by repeating in prose composition the constructions as found in the text, is analytic and partial in its character, and needs to be crystallized by a synthetic study of syntactical principles. My experience has been that pupils are not able to synthesize this analytic knowledge for themselves; and that while having a fairly good knowledge of different parts, they do not know the subject as a whole, nor the relations of the parts to each other. It is hoped that the following exercises will be found to possess such advantages as are to be drawn from following the text, with none of the disadvantages.
