

The Coming Railroad: The Chase-Kirchner Aerodromic System of Transportation (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Coming Railroad: The Chase-Kirchner Aerodromic System of Transportation Transportation is the greatest single interest in this country, except perhaps agriculture, and that is reciprocal. No one condition would so completely relegate the world to the dark ages as the entire obliteration of the present system of railroads. So none can be conceived which would more materially advance the interests of civilization than would an increase of their present state of efficiency. Speed is the present and future problem of railroads. The pressure for a more rapid movement of passengers and freight has become intense. It is a necessity of the fast age in which we live, and it is felt by the management of every railroad. The motive power is taxed to its utmost.
