Excerpt from The Recommendations of the Oxford University Commissioners: With Selections From Their Report; And a History of the University Subscription Tests, Including Notices of the University and Collegiate Visitations External regulation and control have from an early period influenced the Universities and Colleges of Oxford and Cambridge. University degrees, before the Reformation, obtained a European authority through the papal sanction of the corporations which conferred such certificates of academical progress. Papal bulls, Royal charters, and occasionally Acts of Parliament, created and modified privileges in our ancient collegiate institutions; and when the followers of Wycliffe became numerous in the seats of learning, ecclesiastical policy induced the foundation of richly-endowed Roman Catholic Colleges to attract the youthful students of the poorer classes of society, and to provide for them a long continued academical residence. At the commencement of the fifteenth century, visitations, under archiepiscopal authority, took place both at Oxford and Cambridge, for the suppression of Lollardism in their colleges and halls. A happier day dawned shortly afterwards with the revival of classical learning, but the principles of religious toleration were but little known even in the time of Cardinal Wolsey.
