Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: ... two objects has more than the other of the quality expressed; thus small-er, heavi-er. before most quality-words of two syllables, and before all quality-words of more than two syllables, we use the word more to show that one of two things has more than the other of the quality expressed; thus, more modest, more beautiful, more industrious. 2. Tell how many syllables each of these quality-words has:--active, neat, wide, patient, studious, bitter, tall, rough, generous, smooth, finny, homely, lovely, ugly, witty. 3. To which of the above quality-words would you add er? 4. With which of the above quality-words would you use more? Instead of adding er, or using more, we sometimes change the quality-word to show that one of two things has more than the other of the quality expressed; thus, That is a good pen, but this is a better one. See Nate, page 3. 5. Use these quality-words correctly:--bad or ill.... worse, little.... less. 6. Compare any two objects in the room which have the same quality; use the word expressing that quality so as to show that one of the two objects has more than the other of the quality expressed; thus, The bell is heavy, but the globe is heavier. The bell is the smaller of the two. He is taller and more slender than John. /. Compare two objects that you have seen at home, and speak a word that expresses a quality which both have; speak that word so that it will show that one object has more than the other of the quality expressed. 8. Mention two things that are,--hard, opaque, brittle, handsome, fragrant, clear, porous, blunt, sunny, transparent, elastic, tough, careful, little, mischievous. 9. Use each of the above quality-words so that it will show that one of two things has more than the other of the quality expressed. Exercise. 1...
